

L'Hôtel des trois frères

In the Middle Ages lived in Saint-Martin-de-Londres three rich men in love with a woman: Loup, Guiral and Clair...
Having confessed their love to the lady, the latter replied that marry the most glorious.

All three parties to the war. A few years later, they returned covered with glory, but their honor was veiled, because the young woman had died during their absence. Mad with grief, they decided by mutual agreement to live as hermits. They each went on one of the three peaks forming a triangle around the village. Every year at Christmas, they would light a big fire that we saw in the plain and pointed out their presence. Christmas, there were more than two fires. Then one. Then no. The three hermits were dead.
